MUNICIPAL STATISTICS

The urban population of Canada, as has been shown in the Population section of the Year Book, has increased at an extremely rapid rate during the past generation. The aggregation of the people into cities has necessarily increased the difficulties and the complexity of community life. Problems of water supply, police and fire protection, sanitation and sewerage, transportation, education, public health and recreation, have at enormous expense been faced and solved. Necessarily there has been a great increase in municipal taxation, and municipal finance has become an essential part of the public finance of Canada.

Municipal financial statistics have recently been published by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics (Finance Branch) for 53 cities and towns having a population of 10,000 and over, while financial statis-
