

that country from 35th to 13th place. On the other hand the diversion of imports of raw sugar and other tropical products from Cuba and Santo Domingo to countries willing to make more favourable trade agreements with Canada has resulted in Cuba dropping from 4th to 21st place and Santo Domingo from 10th to 29th place in the import trade.

Exports to Principal Countries.—An analysis of Canada's total domestic exports by countries, 1930, demonstrates that the decreases when compared with 1929 occurred chiefly in the exports to those countries that purchase large quantities of grains, principally wheat, from Canada, such as the countries of Europe and China and Japan in the Orient. Indeed if the exports of grains during the two years be eliminated from exports to such countries, it will be found that exports of other commodities were well maintained, while in the case of some countries where grain products form an insignificant part of Canada's exports there were increases, as in exports to the United States, Argentina and
