with 1930, while revenue from fees had increased as a result of the raising of fees to fill the gap.

From the standpoint of financial support, there are at least three classes of institution. First, there are those that rely on grants from provincial treasuries for their unkeep: six of the provinces have such universities and the remaining three have colleges in this class. Secondly, there are the institutions such as Dalhousie, McGill and McMaster Universities, to cite a few, that rely for their support on endowments, and do not receive provincial grants. Thirdly, there are colleges either operated or controlled by religious denominations which do not receive provincial assistance, and which may not have a financial endowment sufficient to carry them. These may have another type of endowment—in men, so to speak, like the University of Ottawa and other Roman Catholic colleges conducted by religious orders. Since salaries are commonly only nominal in these schools, expenses are comparatively low per pupil accommodated. The other section of the third group-mainly Protestant theological and arts colleges—commonly rely on Church contributions where their financial endowments are inadequate.
