

Intended Destination and Occupation.—Experience has shown that not all immigrants reach the province of intended destination or follow intended occupation. Table 8 gives intended destination and occupation as stated by the immigrants entering Canada in 1952. Of the total immigrants, 45 p.c. were dependent wives and children, 10 p.c. were classed as farm workers, 13 p.c. as skilled workers and 12 p.c. as unskilled workers, while 11 p.c. were in the clerical, professional and merchant classes.

Of the total female immigrants, aside from dependent wives and children who accounted for 69 p.c., domestic servants comprised the largest occupational class followed by the clerical and professional classes. Only 3 p.c. were classed as skilled workers.

Rejections and Deportations.—The Immigration Act provides for the rejection and deportation of immigrants belonging to prohibited classes, and also for the deportation of those who become undesirables within five years after legal entry. The results of the operation of these regulations are shown in Table 9.

Section 2.—Emigration

Emigration from Canada is an important factor tending to offset both present and past immigration activities. The movement to the United States of native-born Canadians as well as of Europeans who originally migrated to Canada attained considerable proportions at certain periods. The figures of Table 10,
