The Province of Quebec, in common with the rest of Canada, experienced great industrial expansion following World War II. Two of the most important developments are the Ungava iron ore projects and the titanium industry. Production of non-ferrous metals expanded considerably; aluminum particularly made impressive strides, reaching a record output of 500,000 tons in 1952. The great asbestos industry was modernized and expanded. Additions to refining and storage facilities greatly increased the output of petroleum products. Noteworthy also is the establishment of many new furniture factories.
