

of each Dominion to advise the Crown in all matters relating to its own affairs" Subsequent to this important meeting, Canada's stature and status in the international community continued to grow. Following from the earlier (1923) Imperial Conference, Canada exercised the powers of treaty-making and had established its own diplomatic missions overseas. The Statute of Westminster in 1931 provided more explicit recognition of the principles of equality of status by removing the remaining limitations on the legislative autonomy of Commonwealth countries. As a further development of Canada's independent position, all legal cases started in Canada after Dec. 23, 1949 could no longer be appealed to the Privy Council in London and the Supreme Court of Canada became the final court of appeal for all Canadian legal cases.

Canada's International Status.—The growth of Canada's international status is reflected in the development of the Department of External Affairs. A review of the organization and development of that Department is given in the 1952-53 Year Book, pp. 101-104; a brief outline is given at pp. 132-133 of this volume.

The following Section 1 covers Canadian diplomatic representation abroad and representation of other countries in Canada. Section 2 deals with Canada's main international activities during 1965 and early 1966 with respect specifically to the Commonwealth, the United Nations, and the North Atlantic Treaty Organization. International economic aid programs and Canada's participation in the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development are covered separately. Although these fields are considered to be the most significant for the purposes of this publication, it should be noted that Canada's activities in other areas are also of importance. The External Affairs Monthly Bulletin* covers all activities of the Department.
