

Scarborough University, just east of Toronto, is one of the thirteen new universities established across Canada within the past twenty years. These new university buildings and those added to older campuses are generally avant-garde in structure, with a forward-looking active aspect very different from the quiet staid appearance of university buildings constructed in previous decades.

The Old Arts Building of the University of New Brunswick, erected during 1825-28, is the oldest university building still in use in Canada. It is now surrounded by twenty-six permanent buildings and accommodates the university administrative offices.
