

out through a public service comprising employees organized in departments and ministries of government and special boards, commissions, Crown corporations and other agencies. Legislation and tradition have developed a non-partisan public service; employee tenure is unaffected by changes in government. The only direct contact public servants have with Parliament occurs when they are called as witnesses before parliamentary committees; they do not, by convention, express opinions on public policy but usually appear as experts and to explain existing policy. Public servants who head agencies such as the Public Service Commission, the office of the Auditor General, the office of the commissioner of official languages, the Library of Parliament or the office of the chief electoral officer are responsible directly to Parliament. They are not subject to direction by the government on matters of policy and may appear before parliamentary committees to explain the policies of their agencies.

Growth in number, variety and complexity of the demands placed on the government requires it not only to adjust its policies but to make changes in the organization of the public service so that required policies can be implemented. Major reorganizations of the public service were authorized by a series of government organization acts in 1966, 1969, 1970, 1976, 1979 and 1982.

19.2 The executive

19.2.1 The Crown

The Sovereign. Since Confederation Canada has had six sovereigns: Victoria, Edward VII, George V, Edward VIII, George VI and Elizabeth II. The present sovereign is not only Queen of Canada but is also head of state of other countries in the Commonwealth as well as being the formal head of the Commonwealth. Her title for Canada was approved by Parliament and established by a royal proclamation on May 28, 1953: Elizabeth the Second, by the grace of God of the United Kingdom, Canada and her other realms and territories, Queen, Head of the Commonwealth, Defender of the Faith.

From time to time the Queen personally discharges the functions of the Crown in Canada, such as the appointment of the Governor General, which Her Majesty does on the recommendation of the Prime Minister of Canada. During a royal visit, the Queen may participate in ceremonies normally carried out in her name by the Governor General, such as the opening of Parliament or the granting of a general amnesty.

The Governor General is the representative of the Crown in Canada. The Right Honourable Jeanne Sauvé, the 23rd Governor General since Confederation and Canada's first woman Governor General, was appointed by Queen Elizabeth on December 23, 1983 and took office on May 14, 1984. Constitutionally, the Queen of Canada is the Canadian head of state but the Governor General fulfils her role on her behalf. The letters patent revised and issued under the Great Seal of Canada on October 1, 1947 authorized and empowered the Governor General, on the advice of the Canadian ministers to exercise all powers and authorities lawfully belonging to the Sovereign in respect of Canada.
