Present Trends of Population Growth as Applied to the Future.*—

Population projections on the basis of past trends are made to facilitate scientific examination of the resultant consequences that will ensue from the continued operation of such trends, their purpose is not to forecast future population. Their value lies in pointing the way to possible remedial action, and thus adjust trends that are not wholly in the national interest. The methods adopted by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics in carrying on this work and the interpretations of, and limita-
