Apiculture.—The keeping of bees in Canada is as much an industry as any other form of Canadian enterprise and has, in some cases, developed into a 'big business' involving more than a thousand colonies which produce many thousands of pounds of honey. Annual statistics of honey production have been published since 1924, when 22,200 beekeepers were engaged in producing honey. Since then, the number has almost doubled and in 1944 there were 40,700 beekeepers. Ontario continues to be the chief producing province and contributes about half of Canada's total production. In 1944, Ontario produced 43 p.c. of the total, followed by Manitoba and Alberta with 15 p.c. each, Saskatchewan with 12 p.c., Quebec with 10 p.c., British Columbia with 4 p.c. and the Maritime Provinces with 1 p.c.
